COMMEMORATIVE POEM

A. D. 1919

I.

THERE'S a clamour of many voices,
There's a murmur of marching feet,
And a music that rejoices
Where the ranks move down the street:
Friends with the hearts of strangers,
Boys with the eyes of men,
Having endured all dangers
And so returned again.
Therefore with banners burning
And cheers that rise and roll
Honour to these returning
Who saved our honour whole.

II.

Kingdoms and Dominations
Have owned their fighting worth—
This common clay of nations
Clad in the hue of earth;
These common souls and human
Who laugh their sins abroad
But hide the love of woman
And seek the fear of God.
Through poison, fire, and prison
Unscared, unscathed, they came—
The sons of Man arisen
Against the sons of Shame.

III.

What of the many others
Forever overseas—
Lovers and sons and brothers
Like these, yet not like these?
For two shall have toiled and striven
Equal in worst and best,
And to one shall be glory given,
And to another, rest:
For two shall have trod one measure
And of one cup drunk deep,
And one shall have sweet pleasure,
And one shall have sweet sleep.

IV.

Look where the soft clouds blossom
O'er the green countryside,
And the earth clothes her bosom
In beauty as a bride,
Can any peace delight them
Whose delights rest undone,
Or any heaven requite them
For this world wooed and won?
Filled full and flushed with morning
They sang and took the sword—
The night came without warning,
And where is their reward?

V.

As a man makes a garden
Not for the fruits repaid
But only to be warden
Of life his hands have made;
As a woman bears her children
Not that their loves atone,
But only to look upon them
And know them for her own—
O youth foregone, foregoing!
O dreams unseem, unought!
God give you joy of knowing
What life your death has bought.

VI.

For our fathers gone before us,
That they have not toiled in vain;
For the mother hearts that bore us
And shall not waste their pain;
For the childhood games and laughter
And the sorrows that turn their tears
To a song in the heart hereafter
Unto the end of years—
For these, and what else unspoken
Live when a soldier dies,
You are the body broken—
You are the Sacrifice.

Copyright, 1919, by Brian Hooper.

VII.

For the flower from the clod emerging
 And the fire from the cloud released,
 For the wife that is more than virgin
 And the man that is more than beast;
 For the spirit in strange communion
 With earth, yet more than earth—
 The mystery of union,
 The miracle of birth—
 For these, and what holier dreaming
 Our dust and its deeds have meant,
 You are the blood redeeming—
 You are the Sacrament.

VIII.

For the pure fear that hovers,
 The sure faith that descends
 Between the lips of lovers,
 Between the eyes of friends—
 All giving beyond repayment,
 All truth neither bought nor sold,
 The body more than raiment
 And the soul more than gold—
 In all that we live believing,
 In all that we might have lost,
 You are the spirit living—
 You are the Pentecost.

IX.

Your hands confirm our manhood,
 Your hearts hold women true,
 And the wide eyes of children
 Are clean because of you.
 Through desperate wars undaunted
 Our future arms retain
 Your gift of fear confronted,
 Your gift of conquered pain,
 Stronger when foes dispute you,
 Wiser when fools deny,
 We who must live salute you
 Who have found strength to die!

X.

Bring flowers they loved! Let trumpets
 Sound, and the feast be spread!
 Shall not earth live the fairer
 For their sake who are dead?
 Not ashes nor any sorrow
 Be borne for such as they—
 Give them the golden morrow
 They dwelt in yesterday!
 Seeing our days inherit
 What joys they dared forego,
 Surely they see and share it—
 Surely they know—they know!

XI.

There's a clamour of many voices,
 There's a murmur of marching feet,
 And a music that rejoices
 Where the ranks move down the street:
 Friends with the hearts of strangers,
 Boys with the eyes of men,
 And souls that have done with dangers
 And slept, and risen again.
 Among them, above them, around them,
 The unseen legions throng,—
 With the gold of our dreams we have crowned them,
 And their robes are the sound of our song,
 Therefore with banners burning,
 With lights and with garlands dressed,
 Honour to these returning—
 Honour to those at rest.
